London Times

France, Monday, Sept. 10, 1792

On Saturday morning Mr. Lindsay, Secretary to Lord Gower, arrived at the Secretary of State's Office from France, which place he left on Wednesday, though not without some difficulty, as there was much hesitation shown in deliver him his passport. Mr. Lindsay may congratulate himself on having escaped with safety. As the affairs of France very naturally engross the whole of the public attention, we have made it our business to collect the occurrences that have happened with as much precision as circumstances would admit. In the history of mankind, we have

Wednesday, the MASSACRE continued without abatement. The city had been a scene of bloodshed and violence without intermission since Sunday noon, and although it is difficult and indeed impossible to ascertain with any precision the number that had fallen victims to the fury of the mob during these three days, we believe the account will not be exaggerated when we state it at TWELVE THOUSAND PERSONS (We state it as a fact, which we derive from the best information, that during the Massacre on the 2d instant, from SIX to EIGHT THOUSAND Persons perished).

To those whose situations do not lead them to enquiry, or who have not an opportunity to do so, this number will be considered as a gross exaggeration.

When the mob went to the prison de la Force, where the Royal attendants were chiefly confined, the Princess DE LAMBALE went down on her knees to implore a suspension of her fate for 24 hours. This was at first granted, until a second mob more ferocious than the first, forced her apartments, and decapitated her. The circumstances which attended her death were such as makes humanity shudder, and which decency forbids us to repeat. Previous to her death, the mob offered her every insult. Her thighs were cut across, and her bowels and heart torn from her, and for two days her mangled body was dragged through the streets.

It is said, though this report seems dubious, that every Lady and state prisoner was murdered, with only two exceptions Madame

TIS Access

Work will vary between BUZZ and Edgenuity, each with their own separate classes

In both classes: work can still be completed after the due date.

In both classes: past and missing assignments will be zeroed out, meaning they will not show up on the to-do list. Check the gradebook to see what is missing!

TIS Projects

Sometimes TIS assignments will require students to complete projects, these may be uploaded online via taking videos/images or by bringing them in to our Monday Check ins.

If a student is having trouble or has confusion about these projects, I am available during Monday meetings and Friday office hours
